No, I do not agree that all the young Americans should be in the military for two years. Some of those young men and women may not want to be in the service. Some may want to go to college right out of high school. All people have different abilities and religions. When I say abilities I mean that some people are not ~~athletic~~ athletic as some people and my just want to go to college. Then, when I say, religion some people have a different belief on going to War and killing people.

So, ~~that~~ that is why I give grate thanks for those in the military for giving us a free country by protecting it agianst others. Then there are others ~~that~~ that like to do college and military. So, that when they come out of high school they can go to the military then go to college. So, I say, it is your decision if you want to go in the military. It's also your decision if you want to go to college. Or, you could do both of them.

Score Point: 2

This response reflects flawed proficiency in persuasive writing skills. The writer's position is that serving two years in the military should not be a requirement but rather a personal decision. The response displays weak organization, contains few relevant details, and is repetitive.
